Course Highlights

Hartford Campus

SOCI 3201 - Methods of Social Research (Pryce-Glynn): It is often said that statistics and generalizations are only as good as the studies that produce them. Just pick up a newspaper, turn on the television, or startup a computer and you'll find overwhelming amounts of information about historical trends and the behaviors of social groups. Often we do not know where this information comes from or how reliable it is. How can we distinguish good information from bad? One answer is to understand how research is produced. This course will focus on the central methods used by sociologists including, surveys, interviews, observations, ethnography, content analysis, experiments, and applied research. We will lay a common foundation by evaluating the work of others. Students will also gain practical experience designing and in some cases implementing their own research through a series of take home assignments and in-class exercises.

SOCI 3601 - Sociology of Gender (Pryce-Glynn): Gendered facets of our lives often become visible in what may seem like trivial moments. Infant clothing stores provide particularly vivid examples of gender with their pink and blue sections corresponding to (who else) girls and boys, respectively. Yet, as our authors will argue, gender is a highly consequential aspect of our social lives. Just consider how employment, education, family, and sports are gendered. This course explores sociological approaches to the study of gender, primarily in the U.S. Given the multidimensionality of selfhood, we will pay special attention to the intersections of gender and other facets of identity including race, ethnicity, nationality, sexuality, and class. Students will gain an understanding of the impact of overarching discursive and structural forces — historical, economic, social, and political — as well as the micro interactions of social actors that shape performances and understandings of femininities, masculinities, and transgender identities. Throughout this course we will examine how practices and systems of gender inequality are reproduced, challenged, and transformed.

Related Courses
